

“I Will Trust You Lord” - Hutt Hutson

Key Text for Today -Psalm 23

Trust is a two-way street. A healthy relationship isn't one-sided. It's not just that you are this really trustworthy person and your friends can all trust you and count on you. It's that you can also trust them. For many, this is where it all falls apart. I want you to trust me, but I am not sure I want to trust you. You see, for me to trust you would mean that I would have to give up some control. If I give up control, I am putting the outcome in someone else's hands. This is not something that many of us like to do. As long as we have control we can get our way, at least in theory. In reality, we have hardly any control. Try as we may to keep our grip tightened around every detail, willing things toward our desired outcomes, we just can't do it. There are just way too many things beyond our control, leaving us grasping for things that we will never be able to hold on to. We have got to let go of control and learn to trust.

Key Area #1 - Trusting God With _____

- Our answers to the “who we are” questions are often completely reliant on the _____ of other _____.
- You have _____ over how other people see you.
- _____. I will trust you Lord. (2 Cor. 5:21, Eph. 1:3-10)

Key Area #2 - Trusting God _____

- There are two categories of poor circumstances - the _____ and the _____.
- Unnecessary circumstances are a result of your own _____.
- The unavoidable circumstances are completely out of your _____. You can't _____.
- We _____ in the _____, but we are _____.
- I will _____, for you are with me. I will trust you Lord.

Key Area #3 - Trusting God _____

- Trusting God with your future means that you have _____.
- You _____ the future!
- When we try to control what we cannot, all we are met with is the _____ of our inability and the _____ that follows.
- I will _____ in the house of the Lord _____. I will trust you Lord.

The Lord is my shepherd - I lack nothing.

I will fear no evil - for you are with me.

I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

I will trust you Lord.